The Great Power of Music

It Creates, Stimulates, BUILDS THOUGHT
Copyright, 1910, by American Journal Company

A few days ago, at the annual concert of the Institute of Musical Arts, there appeared in Mendelssohn Hall, New York, Leo Ornstein, a boy of extraordinary promise, a musician possessing the highest talent.

This lad, fifteen years old, lives in a humble quarter of the East Side. To this poor quarter the boy's family came from the horrors, the persecution and murders of Russia only a few years ago. He has lived through poverty, through the horrible scenes of Russian religious persecution—but within him burns the fire of true genius that nothing can quench.

Of this boy, some day, this world may talk and learn. When the day comes those that know music will be glad to have had early knowledge of the boy Leo, destined, we believe, to really great achievement in the years to come.

This boy plays with extraordinary power, and with true appreciation. His orchestral accompaniment was under the direction of Frank Damrosch, head of the admirable Institute of Musical Arts, in which the boy has studied.

To praise his work adequately would seem friendly exaggeration. The piano, usually so cold, so mechanical, so hopelessly "black and white," sings with strange power and sweetness under the touch of this Russian boy.

Those that have heard him and that know music compare him already with the greatest artists that the world has known.

The few that hear him now will consider themselves fortunate in the days of his great success that is to come.

The boy is as simple as any child of his age could be. He walks upon the platform, bashful, with his head hanging.

It is a beautiful head, a fine, noble face, full of power, and reflecting true inspiration.

When he plays it is with the strength and feeling of a grown man. His face is all spirit and light, and love of music carries him far off. There is change also in the duller faces of those that hear him.

Wonderful is the power of music, and very great is the work of the true musician, of the teacher, ABLE TO DEVELOP AND ENCOURAGE A GREAT MUSICIAN.

Noble music is not merely or chiefly an amusement. It is a GREAT CREATIVE FORCE, A BUILDER OF THOUGHT.

What the sunshine and the rain are to the plants in the field, music is to thought in the brain of man. It makes the vilest better, sweeps away the cobwebs of commonplace and routine, makes the sluggish active, and the feeble strong.

Even the dull mind travels far on the wings of music.

Instantly the mind, inspired and set free by music, travels all over this round earth, surveying with sympathy its achievements and its sorrows, and flies away from this earth into the mysterious depths and distances that thought alone inhabits.

He who writes or interprets great music is a teacher, A BUILDER, a true friend of humanity.

And great honor is due to the man or woman whose knowledge and teaching are reflected in the true artist's work.

The teacher of this most promising boy is Mrs. Tapper, and Leo is fortunate in such a teacher, one of the very best of those taught by the great Leschetitzky, of Vienna.

It was pleasing to watch the happy face of this devoted teacher, sharing the triumph of the boy who owes her so much. Michael Angelo could not have looked with greater pride and joy upon his young David, or his old, bearded Moses, after the last stroke of the chisel.

Unselfish devotion really PAYS in this world. You may know that when you see one—and especially a woman—who has worked to build up the success of another.

Years of patient teaching, ceaseless encouragement and protection Mrs. Tapper has given to this boy, whose power she was first to see—long hours, days and months of patient, kind correction and explanation—and all for no other reward than the pleasure of seeing the lad, poor and friendless at first, take his right place in the field of great accomplishment.

Happy the old age of those who in their youth have helped others. Their life goes on in younger lives, and their work lives long after them.

This very month, on the twenty-second, Leschetitzky, that wonderful old musician who taught Leo's teacher, will celebrate his eightieth birthday. Long after he shall have disappeared he and his work will live in those that he taught, and those that his pupils will teach.

And we believe that among them this boy Leo, providentially saved from Russia, brought up in the poverty of an overcrowded city, will stand with the great musicians of the world, on a par with the greatest of the INTERPRETERS of musical genius, and perhaps among the great musical creators.

All will depend—and this we would most strongly impress upon those who have Leo's fate in their hands—upon wisdom TU-DAY, freedom from all premature exploitation of the lad in his youth—ANY CONTINUANCE OF THE WISE AND BENEVOLENT DIRECTION OF THE TEACHER WHO HAS DONE SO MUCH FOR HIM.

Remember the name of Leo Ornstein. You will hear it again.

LETTERS FROM AMERICAN READERS

WANTS ON RAILROAD TIERS

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

The Pennsylvania Railroad, as well as other railroads, are today running short of ties for their roads. In many places are having the business of other, which could be eliminated considerably, to a great extent, by the removal and use of the great public as well.

By the way, all along the Pennsylvania road, at the side of the tracks, from Maine to California, one sees the thousands of glass and metal bottles, and other articles, which are thrown away, and which are being used by the railroad companies and dumped over the sides of the tracks, and are used as well as the people in general.

It is my earnest opinion that the article will go a great way toward the abolition of that inhuman sport, prize fighting, now so popular. I am sure that the people have read this valuable article with much interest, and that they will be glad to see your editorial instructions to the effect that the railroad companies should be required to keep the glass and metal bottles, and other articles, and thus save the people from the use of them.

On the other hand, the farmer could use these ties for fence posts, build corn cribs, pig sheds, and many other buildings could be made from them as they are, thus saving time to the farmer and stopping the cutting down of equal trees for such purposes. In a few years the farmer would benefit by the use of these ties, and would be able to use them much cheaper than they can be now.
